

IT MIGHT BE THE GORILLAS THAT HAVE LONG LURED VISITORS TO RWANDA, but new nature hideaway Singita Kwitonda Lodge isn't doing a bad job of further piquing our interest in 'The Land of a Thousand Hills', either. Newly opened on 72 hectares on the edge of Volcanoes National Park, the exclusive, eight-suite lodge is not only the embodiment of safari suave, with striking yet calming interiors that echo the wildly beautiful landscape, but it was built from materials sourced from the local community. As for the gorilla factor, if the fact that the lodge is situated less than 10 minutes from possible primate sightings isn't enough for you, then you'll be pleased to know Singita is also committed to extensive reforestation initiatives to increase the range and numbers of endangered mountain gorillas in the area. Dian Fossey would be proud.
